

Relevant Christianity in a Post-Christian World

Our most popular seminar is a three-part series, about three hours in length, entitled Relevant Christianity in a Post-Christian World. It is vital for Christians to understand what others believe and why, and how to share our faith in a post-Christian world. It can be done on a Saturday morning, or arranged as a special mid-week or Sunday evening service. The three sessions are:

- Origins of the Sacred Writings: God's Word or Man's? Muslims, Buddhists, and Hindus now live in American neighborhoods. Discover what books they read. A comparison of the origins of the Qur'an, Teachings of Buddha, Bhagavad-Gita, and the Bible. A visual presentation on the major "sacred writings" of the world, showing they are not the Word of God, only the Bible. It helps participants understand what others believe in the world, even their neighbors. I quote from the all the books and have them to pass around for people to see. It has always been very well received.
- Finding God in a Post-Christian World. Today people are looking for God in all the wrong places. A visual presentation on where people look for God in today's world (creation, other people, church, themselves) but come up short. The best place to find God today is the Bible. I share why and how, so people can share with others searching for God.
- How to Share Your Faith Without a Fight. After understanding what other people read and believe, learn to share the Christian faith with others. A visual presentation on how to share one's faith without getting into an argument. Based on Bill Faye's book Share Jesus Without Fear, I share my experiences with witnessing (some good and some not so good), teach six questions people can use to get into conversations about faith, and offer others the chance to share their experiences in witnessing.
